A Horizontal Reduction of the Tariff-Big Political Fighting-In-

[Special to the Courl refournal.] Special to the Court r-Journal.]
Washington, December 11.—Col.
Tom Bayne is a Republican member of the house from Pittsburg. He has served quite a long time in the lower house, and is a man who keeps well posted, especially about Republican thoughts and calculations. The Courier-Journal correspondent asked him to-day what he thought about the shape legislation was going to take this seesion.

seasion.

"As well as I can make it out," he replied, "the tariff is going to be one of the leading issues. Our side thinks, I may say, that so much is certain. That there is going to be an attack on the present tariff, almost from the first to the last article on the schedule, is evident. Just look at the number of hills about the tariff that are passing in."

"There are some Decreased."

There are some Democrats who do not want a general fariff re-opening?" suggested the correspondent. "Yes, I know that," was the reply

"But it is as clear as daylight that the Carlisle men are going to force if. This will cause adivision in the Democratic ranks.

"What, in your opinion, will be the upshot of it all?"

"I think that is also very clear. The result will be the passage by the house of representatives of a measure making a horizontal reduction. It will be something like the tariff of 1833. The resolution will say, for instance, that there shall be a reduction of three per cent, next year, and ten per cent, the year following. Whether the senate will pass such a measure is, of course, a question that I would answer in the negative."
